Further, as they are in an Appendix to the Rules, they do not form part of the Rules themselves and therefore can be changed by Council – using the same procedures as used for bye-law change.

1. The Rules of the Island Golf Club are written in a language that is readily accessible to all the Members. They are not written in scientific or legal language. The language used is meant to be correct, concise and to avoid as far as possible any ambiguities. The rules are so structured that they should not give rise to anomalies and internal incoherence. This however may arise from time to time. Where disputes arise as to the meaning of a Rule or Rules then the following should be taken into account.
2. In the first instance the dictionary meaning of the words will prevail
3. The intention of the framers and original approvers of the Rules will be taken into account
4. Interpretations that would lead to consequences that are patently absurd and definitely not within the intention or the aims of the Rules or the framers of the Rules are not acceptable.
5. If a particular practice or understanding has, over a period of time, given rise to a certain interpretation of a Rule and if this interpretation is not proving harmful to the Club or to individual Members, then this view should be treated respectfully in any dispute concerning interpretation.
6. A Rule which has given rise to a call for interpretation should be read in conjunction with other relevant Rules and should be read in the light of the aims and objectives of the Club and of the intention of those who had approved the Rule.
